CASA COLIBRI has a long history providing health & related services to Mayan villages in the mountains of Guatemala

"The love of a family is life’s greatest blessing" and also the glue that holds a society together. Our program of micro-lending helps to create economic opportunities within the community so that families aren’t split apart by husbands or wives being forced to leave to find work. It’s a “little thing” that ends up being “the biggest thing”!

This family is doing well enough to be able to have a "pila" in their home, a staple of rural Guatemalan life. In the center is a water tank, usually filled with rainwater. One side is for hand-washing laundry and has a ribbed surface. The other side has smaller buckets to be filled and used for washing dishes, personal washing, and even bathing a baby like the sweet little one seen here. Casa Colibri’s micro-lending program (TCP Global) is helping families on the road to economic success so that they can fund such improvements to their homes and communities.
